Personal Narrative

Have you ever been so embarrassed that you wanted to turn invisible? When I was about your age, I ended up calling my grandmother a pig while we were eating take-out chicken! This insult wasn't intended for her and was a really embarrassing moment for me. I learned a valuable lesson during that meal too.

One winter when I was younger, my family went to Moncton to watch the Ice Capades show. This was a traveling show for entertainment that had former Olympic and champion figure skaters. After the show, we went to my grandparent's house in Shediac and were having take-out chicken for supper. Everyone was happy after seeing the show and we loved eating take-out.

As the family sat down to eat, we were talking about the show and I was having fun until the embarrassing moment came. I got up to get another piece of chicken and saw that there was a piece of chicken ripped in half. Maybe someone took a bite! Who would do this except your brother, the pig? That's when I decided to ask everyone "Who was the pig who bit into this piece of chicken?". To my surprise and embarrassment, my sweet grandmother answered "C'était moi". This did not go as planned and I was very embarrassed.

A lot of times you can learn something from an embarrassing moment. For me, I learned that it is important to have good evidence before calling your brother a pig in front of everyone. It sure isn't a good feeling when it feels like everyone is laughing at you. You want to leave the situation immediately and get the attention of everyone away from you. In the moment, you don't see anything positive about the situation.

Embarrassing moments are horrible to go through. I will never forget the day that I ended up calling my grandmother a pig! It was a good lesson to be sure you have the facts before you accuse someone. A few years ago, I asked my grandmother if she remembered when I called her a pig by mistake. She laughed at the story as we remembered my embarrassing moment. Now that I am grown, I know that it isn't nice to call anyone a pig (even your brother).
